

FCC: Not only is terrestrial radio out-technologied by satellite broadcasters-- like samurai warriors vs gattling guns--but they also dug their own grave with their limited play lists and obnoxious radio 'personalities'. Not to mention adsadsadsads and begathons. I never listen to them any more and I don't miss them even a tiny bit. If I ever need it, I can get weather and traffic info from XM.

That's because XM tries to please their listeners not some format thought up by a cautious to the point of dullness station manager. Every time I turn on my XM boom box, an adventure awaits. Terrestrial radio is like cold, burnt coffee. Pls. don't limit satellite's potential to keep terrestrial on life support. Thank you for your attention.
